

CONTENTS

Preface		5
1.	Towards the definition of the noun phrase	7
2.	Noun phrase and the theory of reference	10
2.1.	Noun phrases functioning as specified argumental expressions (Primary system of reference: axis Text -• Reality)	17
2.1.1.	Primary argumental expressions	17
2.1.1.1.	The notion 'proper, name'—denotation, connotation and the linguistic motivation thereof	17
2.1.1.2.	Personal pronouns; forms of address, referential formulas used in praesentia	22
2.1.1.2.1.	Adverbial demonstrativa	26
2.1.1.3.	Linguistic corollaries of the pointing gesture	26
2.1.1.3.1.	Personal pronouns of the 3. pers.	26
2.1.1.3.2.	General demonstrativa	29
2.1.2.	Definite descriptions	29
2.1.2.1.	Definite descriptions proper	31
2.1.2.2.	Situational (situation-bound) descriptions	34
2.1.2.2.1.	Ostensive descriptions. Deixis in praesentia	37
2.1.2.2.2.	Deixis in absentia (called also deixis adphanlasma)	45
2.2.	Anaphora—secondary system of reference: axis Text Text	47
2.3.	Noun phrases functioning as unspecified argumental expressions	54
2.3.1.	The problem of the indefinite article in Slavic	63
2.4.	Noun phrases referring to pluralities of material objects	65
2.4.1.	Exponents of referential quantifiers in phrases referring to plu- ralities	77
2.5.	Noun phrases constituted by substance names and referentially used	82
2.6.	Noun phrases referring to parts of (discrete) material objects	87
2.7.	Noun phrases used without reference	88
2.8.	Noun phrases in statements about imaginary worlds	90
2.9.	Compound referential operators	93
2.9.1.	Referential identity excluded and/or emphasized	93
2.9.2.	The scope of primary quantifier emphasized	95
3.	The semantic structure of the Slavic noun phrase mapped into its syntactic structure: I. The nuclear noun phrase—constitutive member vs its determiners	99
3.1.	The constitutive member of the nuclear noun phrase—possibili- ties of formalization and their semantic motivation	100
3-2,	Determiners of the constitutive member of the nuclear noun phra-

	se—mechanisms for introducing of the new predicative content into the nuclear noun phrase	104
3.2.1.	Determiners expressing predicates whose primary exponents are adjectives	105
3.2.2.	Determiners expressing predicates whose primary exponents are verbs	108
3.2.3.	Relative clause as basic nominal determiner.	111
3.2.4.	Relative clause condensed	116
3.2.4.1.*	Propositions condensed into noun phrases dependent on the constitutive member of the nuclear noun phrase.	116
3.2.4.2.	Propositions condensed into ("relational") adjectives.	119
3.3.	Determiners in apposition.	124
3.4.	Referential quantifiers built into the constitutive member of the phrase.	126
4.	Secondary noun phrases—products of nominalization	128
4.1.	Referential quantification of events.	131
4.2.	Syntax of nominalization. Selected problems	137
4/2.1.	Nominalizations as parts of periphrastic predicates.	137
4.2.2.	Two-level nominalization.	141
4.2.3.	Inclusiveness of predicates and nominalization.	144
4:2/4.	Arguments formalized as nominal determiners	146
	The semantic structure of the Slavic noun phrase mapped into its syntactic structure: II. Basic nominal string—rules of linearization	151
5.1.	Segment I—exponents of reference and of quantitative evaluation (RQEs)	152
5.1.1.	Compound RQEs.	155
5.2.	Segment II—restrictive determiners; components of the basic nominal string ,	155
5.2.1.	Segment II—sequence II A	156
5.2.2.	Segment II—sequence II B	162
5.3.	Word order as exponent of the derivational history of the basic nominal string , ,	168
6.	Noun phrase and the so-called grammatical categories of the Slavic noun	170
6.1.	The so-called category of definiteness	172
6.2.	The so-called category of number.	174
6.3.	The grammatical category of gender	177
6.4.	Categories of definiteness, number and gender and the outer syntax of the noun phrase	181
6.5.	The grammatical category of case.	182
6.6.	The grammatical category of appeal (= the vocative form)	185
6.7.	Nominal categories as secondary motivation for distributional word-classes	186
	Appendix.	189
	Bibliography	192
	Uwagi o słowiańskiej grupie nominalnej (Streszczenie)	198